Reflection - 7th Sunday of Easter

The Solemnity of the Ascension of the Lord shows, first of all, what the ultimate goal of our journey is: communion with God, eternal Life. But it also reminds the disciples of Jesus that, while they walk the earth, they have the responsibility to continue His work and bear witness to God's salvation.

In the Gospel, the Risen Jesus bids farewell to the disciples and entrusts them with His mission. The disciples, formed in the "school" of Jesus, are called to bring the Gospel to all nations, to proclaim to all men and women the love and mercy of God. They will not be alone: Jesus will send them the “promise of the Father,” the “power from on high,” the Holy Spirit. This Spirit will give them the strength they need to face obstacles and help them discern the paths they must follow.

The first reading repeats the essential message of this feast: after sharing the Father's plan with humanity, Jesus entered the eternal Life of communion with God—the same life that awaits all who follow the “way” He walked. The disciples, witnesses of Jesus' departure, cannot remain gazing at the sky; they must go out among their brothers and sisters and continue Jesus' mission.

The second reading invites the disciples to be aware of the “hope” to which they have been called: the fullness of Life in communion with God. It is this “hope” that illuminates the path of all who are part of the Church, the “body” of which Christ is the “head.”
