Commentary by Cyril of Alexandria

“To whom shall we go?” Peter asks. In other words, “Who else will instruct us the way you do?” or, “To whom shall we go to find anything better?”

“You have the words of eternal life”; not hard words, as those other disciples say, but words that will bring us to the loftiest goal, unceasing, endless life removed from all corruption.

These words surely make quite obvious to us the necessity for sitting at the feet of Christ, taking him as our one and only teacher, and giving him our constant and undivided attention. He must be our guide who knows well how to lead us to everlasting life.

...For being always in his company means being steadfast in following him and constant in cleaving to him. But accompanying the Savior Christ and following him is by no means to be thought of as something done by the body. It is accomplished rather by deeds springing from virtue...

We have lots of expenses: roof work needs to be done; repairs all over the building; maintenance in the house; hopefully, new air-conditioning in the church some day, etc. Please support your parish.

MUSIC AND CHRISTIAN SPIRITUALITY

“Transcendent,” “otherworldly,” “heavenly,” “sublime” — how common it is to hear moving musical experiences, and by no means exclusively in religious contexts, described in such religiously inflected terms as these. Could this intuitive suggestion point to something truthful about music’s potential to direct the human heart to the divine? This course will provide an opportunity for theological reflection on music from a Christian perspective, claiming music’s real potential to become an occasion of encounter with God. We will explore the major theological underpinnings of music, understood as a force of spiritual significance and potency. We will apply to music a Catholic theological lens, drawing on the language of sacrament, incarnation, beauty, contemplation and discipleship. The course will suggest ways that a sincere and Christ-oriented engagement with music might enrich the spiritual life. To bolster our study, we will focus on an illuminating musical selection in each session.
